

DHRUPAL ISHWAR

Dhrupal works in the Medical Physics department at Glenfield Hospital.

“ I am learning to build and fix machines used in the hospital for blood pressure monitoring and measuring heartbeat.”

“I also move old and new machines in and out of the storage room.”

Working on the special computers has been a challenge for him so far.

At times, he has found it difficult to go through specific details on paperwork to check how well some of the machines are working, but he has the support of his manager to overcome the challenge.

“My plans for the future are that I would like to join the hospital and continue working in Medical Physics.”

The most favourite part of Dhrupal’s placement is that it has made him feel a sense of joy and accomplishment in building and fixing. He also likes working in the department and alongside team members at the hospital.
